TRADE MARK

The Japanese Spaniel, a native of Japan, but well known in China, has only been introduced into this country within the last forty years. The Spaniel is either black and white or red and white He is intelligent and affectionate, and popular as a pet, though of a decidedly jealous temperament. One of its principal points is his butterfly marking on the head. His tail should be feathery and curled up over his back, his legs should be short and feathered, his feet small and feathered, his nose very flat against the face. The smaller he is the more he is thought of.
